

ALBANY LAW SCHOOL

Combined Albany Law School JD and Clarkson University MBA or MBA in Healthcare Management

Clarkson University and Albany Law School offer two combined JD/MBA degree options; a JD/MBA in General Management and a JD/MBA in Healthcare Management. The combined programs allow students to “double count” courses which reduces the total time and cost associated with completing the two degrees separately. The combined degree is typically completed in four years or less.

Combined program students complete the first year full-time at Albany Law School. The second year is spent as a full-time student at Clarkson University with a typical course load of four courses per trimester. Some students complete the MBA requirements in the second year. Students should work closely with the law school registrar and adviser to prepare a plan. If necessary, students will complete the remaining courses by taking one MBA course per term in the third and fourth years. Albany Law School follows a semester academic calendar while Clarkson follows a quarter calendar. Students must complete the MBA requirements by the end of the winter quarter of the fourth year.

Once MBA requirements are met, Albany Law School will transfer in 13 credits of free electives from the MBA courses taken at Clarkson University. Clarkson University accepts up to 3 courses from the Law School. This usually reduces the total time needed to complete the JD from three years of course work to two and a half years. Students who have completed all course requirements at Albany Law School do not return for the 3L Spring term.
