

Dr. David Young

SVP and Chief Technology Officer, CAES

Dr. David Young serves as the Senior Vice President and Chief Technology Officer for CAES. CAES is a world leader and pioneer of advanced electronics for the most technologically challenging military and aerospace trusted systems. In this role, Dr. Young works with the company's operating divisions on new business growth, the overall technical roadmap and related business strategies, pioneering advanced research and early prototyping, strengthen technical interchanges on strategic programs with our customers as well as leading the company's government relations, communications, and corporate development efforts.

Prior to joining CAES, Dr. Young served as Vice President of Advanced Program Development at Lockheed Martin Space in Colorado, where led a diverse team to deliver numerous technology innovations and development programs. Previously, Dr. Young served as the sector VP of BD & Strategy at Northrop Grumman. Over his career he held a variety of senior business, technology, engineering, business development and strategy roles across many DOD and NASA aerospace programs.

Dr. Young holds a Doctorate in Philosophy in aerospace engineering and Master of Science degree in aerospace engineering from Georgia Institute of Technology. He also received Bachelor of Science degrees in both aeronautical engineering and physics with a minor in mathematics from Clarkson University. During his career, Dr. Young has numerous publications and received numerous awards and recognitions such as a National Science Foundation Fellowship, NASA Group Achievement Award and multiple Scientific Notable Achievements from the Air Force Research Laboratory.